

Staying In A Hotel

A hotel is where people stay for a few days when they are away from home.

When I arrive, I will check in at a desk in the lobby. If I booked the room, I will show my credit card and ID.

I can ask the front desk what amenities the hotel offers. These could be free internet, a pool, parking, or breakfast.

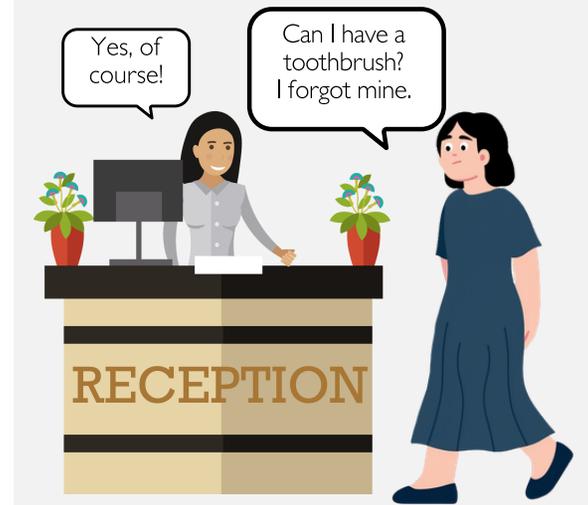

After I check in, the staff will give me a key and direct me to my room. I should not share my key with anyone.

Once I arrive at my room, I should lock the door behind me. I can unpack, relax, and explore the space.

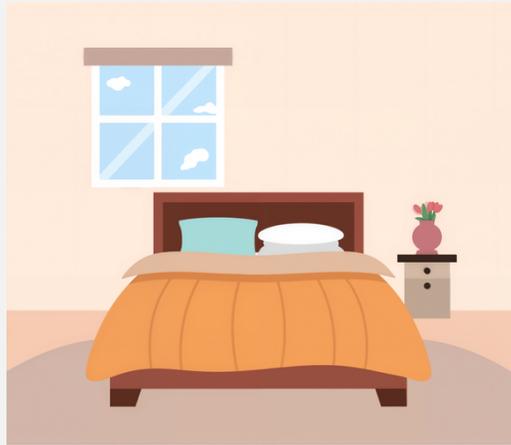

If I forgot to pack something, like a toothbrush or hair comb, I can ask the front desk if they have a spare.

Staying In A Hotel

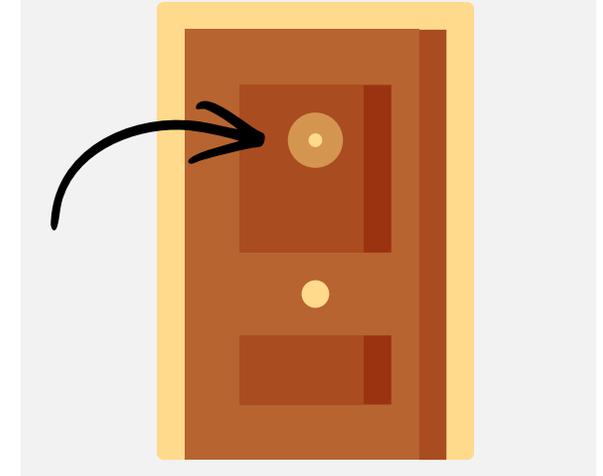

Even though I am staying in the room, it does not belong to me. I should treat this space with respect.

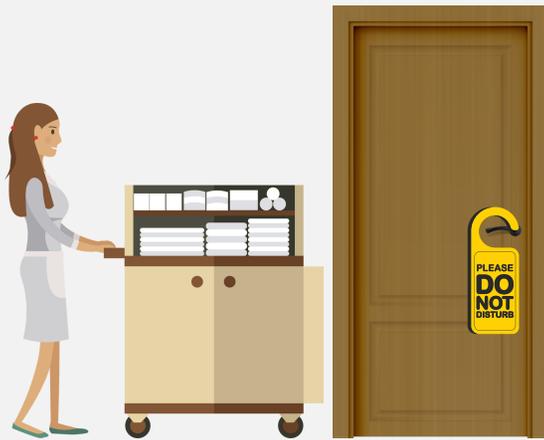

Some hotels offer drinks and snacks in the room. I need to read signs carefully to see if they cost money or if they are free.

If someone knocks on the door, I should ask who it is. Most hotels have a small hole in the door called a "peephole," so I can see out.

It is common for staff to clean my room and give me fresh towels. I can put the "Do Not Disturb" tag on my door if I do not want this service.

While I am staying at the hotel, I can come and go as I please.

When it is time to check out, I should go back to the front desk. I must check out on time, so I do not pay a late fee.
